GOLDEN PLUMED TASSEL OF CORN

An emblem, they tell us, this country should seek
From its posies that nod to the sun—
A hiosocon, whose home ranges widely, to speak
For a nation of many in the
Now let us suggest, here, a plant growing wide.
Waving velcome to freedom's first morn,
And sacred, our own, as the flag of our pride,
The the golden plumed tassel of corn.

For purest of dalaies the many have plead, And still more for the gay goiden rod— Some for the sunflower that waves his grand head Some for the sunflower that waves his grand.
High above all that bloom o'er the sod;
But here is a plant that is Yankee all thro',
And was Yankee ere Yankee was born;
Ere Freedom had hoisted the banner of blue
'Bove the golden plumed tassel of corn.

From the home of the oak to the palmetto

shade, From her center way down to each sea; From mountain to mead, and thro' green gles and glade,

It waves o'er the land of the free.
Should heel of invader that free soil pollute,
And her proud banner trample with scorn,
Yet will the broad earth, in defiant salute,
Wave her golden plumed tassel of corn.

Wave her gotten plants of her rose's per'ume
And a France of pure lily so fair;
While Scotland may weave from her thistie's red bloom
A grand garland to twine in her hair.
But for a proud motto, to stand all alcoa,
And the cap stone of freedom adorn,
We place there above all the posles we own
The golden plumed tasset of corn.

It costs more to keep a poor horse than it does to keep a good one. Change the feed for your horses often enough to make them relish it. Asheville, N. C.

Asheville, N. C., January 15.—We had heavy sales throughout the whole of last week with no abatement of price for any grade and with an upward tendency for good color in all classes of stock. A good deal is thought and said here about the probable effect of a monopolizing charette trust upon the future value of stock suitable for their manufacture, but so far it has had no perceptible effect on the price of such stock here. They will necessarily require the best color for their high grades, and this section of North Carolina and a part of West Virginia will be their main dependence for it. The fine, mild, bright weather has now continued since December 1, with occasionally cloudy, threatening weather, but very little rain and no cold.

pool, although a portion of the decline was recovered. Our market closes barely steady, under a pressure to sell from the German operators, who, encouraged by the increase in the receipts at the ports, have sold freely. A large amount of cotton has also been sold by a prominent commission house identified with strong Liverpool connections, and their sales, apparently, were made for the purpose of depressing prices. Receipts at the ports were full, reaching 31, 000 bales, and placing the aggregate beyond last week to date, the reported interior towns also showing an increase in the movement, adding to the bearish feeling, which has been growing since yesterday. Operators generally look for lower quotations to morrow, but a feature of the day has been a continued absorption of the offerings of the bears by two of the most prominent houses in the market."
